FULL SCORE

DURATION: Approx. 8 minutes 30 seconds

Poet and Peasant Overture
Franz von Suppé (1819–1895)
Composed: 1846

“Where have I heard that before?” you might ask yourself when encountering music of one of the “lesser-knowns” of orchestral music. With the music of Franz von Suppé, the answer would be: In those television cartoons you watched as a child. Maestro Bugs Bunny conducted Suppé’s Morning Noon and Night in Vienna in the classic Baton Bunny. Mickey Mouse conducted his Light Cavalry Overture in Walt Disney’s Symphony Hour; and Popeye needs a can of spinach to help him get through the Poet and Peasant Overture in Spinach Overture.

Franz von Suppé—his parents named him Francesco Ezechiele Ermengildo Cavalieredi Suppé Demelli—was born in what is now Croatia. His Belgian father was a civil servant for the Austrian Empire and his mother came from Vienna. His father discouraged Franz’s early musical talent and sent him to Padua to study law. There he saw the operas of and met Rossini, Verdi and Donizetti. When his father died, he went with his mother to her native Vienna and started studying music in earnest. He got an unpaid internship at one of the theaters in Vienna. Most of what he wrote early on couldn’t be called “opera” (or even “operetta”). Instead, it was instrumental overtures, incidental music, and the occasional song to accompany some sort of theatrical comedy. He wrote his first real “operetta” (The Boarding School) in 1860 and had his first international hit several years later with The Beautiful Galatea. He wrote nearly fifty operettas in all and is credited with establishing the genre of Viennese operetta, placing him on par with what Jacques Offenbach did for French and Gilbert and Sullivan did for English operettas. He died a very rich man.

Suppé wrote Poet and Peasant to accompany a production that he called a “comedy with songs.” It tells of the escapades of a broken-hearted poet as he vacations amongst the “country-folk” in the mountains. The brass play a solemn chorale to begin the overture. A solo cello gets an extended melody accompanied by the harp. The orchestra intrudes with a fiery section that dissolves into a waltz and then revs up for the required “flash-and-dash” ending.
